Subject: Expiration of Private Pilot Theory (CTAN)

Each year the Ohio Department of Higher Education (ODHE) works in collaboration with Ohio Department of Education (ODE) as they review their pathways and current Career-Technical Assurance Guides (CTAGs) and the CTAG courses, also referred to as: Career-Technical Articulation Numbers (CTANs). During this process, it was determined that the alignment of secondary course competencies to postsecondary learning outcomes needs to be stronger for the CTAN listed below:

Private Pilot Theory (CTAIR005)

The Private Pilot Theory CTAN was thoroughly reviewed by faculty and found that the current alignment doesn't support the award college credit at this time. Effective for the 21/22 school year (beginning summer term), ODHE will be expiring this CTAN.

Should a student complete the ODE course in Private Pilot Theory and still wish to seek college credit for the course, they should explore the possibility of Prior Learning Assessment (PLA) credit through their post-secondary institution following their policies and procedures.

Should you have any questions about the CTAN please contact:
